vices. These issues will be now discussed in the UNCTAD VIII scheduled to be held in Colombia in February 1992.

The Tehran Declaration says, inter alia, that the dialogue towards a new partnership for development must be pragmatic and realistic, non-confrontational based on a mutuality of interest, and above all aimed at achieving, through a gradual deepening of the international consensus on specific issues, concrete agreements that can be implemented. It must also lead to the establishment of mechanisms for follow-up on the actions agreed upon and monitor the extent to which they are being carried out. The focus of the dialogue must be the strengthening of national and international action and multilateral co-operation for a healthy, secure and equitable world economy, and more specifically the promotion of economic growth, technological capabilities and accelerated development in the developing countries.

The Ministers reaffirmed the continuing validity of the central mandate of UNCTAD on trade and development issues and its role as a universal and democratic forum for global economic policy analysis, co-ordination and negotiations as well as an instrument for the provision of technical assistance to developing countries. The existing network of international economic relations and institutions has to be made more supportive of the development process and adapted to changes that are taking place in the political and economic environment. The G-77 said the UNCTAD has a crucial role to play in the new global situation. For that UNCTAD must undergo the necessary institutional adaptation in the context of the ongoing reform of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations. It was stressed that every effort should be made to strengthen the effectivness and relevance of UNCTAD in international and national policy making. In order to revitalise UNCTAD's prominent role as a universal forum of negotiations, the G-77 declared that it would be necessary to introduce changes in the structure of the intergovernmental machinery, methods of work and mechanisms and methods of negotiations by allowing complementary forums of country association through a flexible group system. The G-77 said that the UNCTAD Secretariat must be given the necessary authority and independence and provided with adequate resources to carry out effectively the task entrusted to it.
